MERCANTILE APPRAISER.

J. R. Mowry, of Derry, Who Has That Official Position Gets Ready to Discharge His Duties.

J. R. Mowry, Derry's leading merchant, who was appointed Mercantile appraiser, is preparing for the duties of the office.

Mr. Mowry will visit all the business houses in Westmoreland county and after ascertaining the amount of business done by each, he will fix a rate of indebtedness which will be returned to the county treasurer.

As there are some 3,000 business houses in Westmoreland county, the time required to discharge the duties pertaining to the office of mercantile appraiser, is estimated at three months.

The rates for the various licenses in the county are as follows:

Retail merchants, one mill on the dollar's worth of business done.

Wholesale merchants pay one-half mill on the dollar.

Pool rooms pay $30 per year on the first table and $10 on each additional table.

Bowling alleys pay the same licenses as pool rooms, that is $30 per year on the first alley and $10 per year on each additional alley.

A Slight Blaze.

Fire was discovered about 12 o'clock last night in the residence of Joseph Madigan on Donner avenue between Ninth and Tenth streets. The attic is rented to roomers who had lighted a gas jet and then went downstairs. On returning they found that the gas jet, being close to the ceiling, had set it on fire and was burning at a lively rate. An alarm was immediately sent in and the men went to work with buckets of water and hatchets, chopping the plastering. The Volunteer Fire Department responded promptly, but the flames were extinguished before they arrived on the scene. The entire loss will amount to about $30.

Knepshield-Hazelbaker Nuptials.

On Wednesday evening, Jan. 17th, Mr. I. C. Knepshield and Miss Mary M Hazelbaker, attended by Mr. and Mrs. Severn Lauze, were united in marriage at the home of Rev. Henry Madtes on Morgan avenue. The day of the wedding was ideal and the inference is plain, "Happy is the bride that the sun shines on." Mr. and Mrs. Knepshield have the best wishes of their many friends.

Attention Colored Knights of Pythias.

There will be a meeting of the charter committee Knights of Pythias held in Mt. Olive Baptist church, Ninth and Metheral avenue, Thursday evening, Jan. 25, for the purpose of organizing a charter for Monessen. A full attendance of all colored Knights of Pythias is requested, also those who think of joining the order.

Com { R. JACKSON, H. WILLIAMS, RUBEN WYLIE

In Jail On Three Charges.

Henry Smith, a well known colored man of Charleroi, and one of the oldest residents, has fallen into the net of the law, and is now in the borough lockup a default of $1,500 bail. Henry has three charges against him, viz: Selling liquor illegally, selling liquor on Sunday and keeping a disorderly house. County Detective Hilton, of Monongahela, was in Charleroi yesterday and preferred th charges. Henry was arrested yesterday afternoon and was unable to furnish the required bail. His place of residence is on Lincoln avenue, between Tenth and Eleventh streets, and he had always borne a good reputation previous to this time. He will be held for his appearance in court.

The lecture given last night in the opera house, subject "Looking For a Man" by Rose Frederick Wicks, was well delivered and everyone there seemed very much pleased.

J. HOWARD KELLY.

AT THE THEATRE.

That the "wages of sin is death" is proven in a most dramatic manner in that play of absorbing interest, "The Little Homestead" which will be seen at Monessen opera house tomorrow, matinee 2:30 evening 8:15.

"A Romance of Coon Hollow" now in its twelth season is a very lively comedy drama with a well told, absorbing story plenty of fun, and likewise excitement and when done with a good cast and the necessary scenic environments — as we can safely promise in the case befor us, there is no better vehicle of entertainment now available. The old comedy has been revised and improved, and is now given with entire special new scenery from the brush of Mr. Frank Platzer of the New York Academy of Music, and besides a dramatic cast of unusual merit it has the assistance of a quartette and a troupe of pickaninny dancers. The torpedo sensation in "Coon Hollow" has never been excelled as a piece of stage realism and the Cotton Press tragedy is certainly impressive. "A Romance of Coon Hollow" comes to the Monessen opera house tonight.

Betrayed by a Child

Albert L. Jones, a farmer living near Rancocas Park, was put into jail tonight on the charge of having assaulted and murdered his stepdaughter, Mary Clark about three weeks ago. The girl was 9 years old. It is alleged that Jones choked her to death, then tied a heavy stone to her body and threw it into the Rancocas creek.

When the girl failed to return home it was reported she had ran away also that she had been kidnapped. Her sister, Carrie Clark, aged 7, afterward went to visit a relative, Mrs. Minnie Baiwin of Camden to whom she told the story of the tragedy. Mrs. Baldwin came to Mount Holly today and laid the facts before Prosecutor Atkinson. Two hours after Jones was arrested. He refused to make any statement. The creek will be dragged tomorrow for the child's body. Jones' wife was also arrested to-night, charged with complicity in the crime.

Birthday Party.

Irene, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Peden, gave a party last evening in honor of her ninth birthday. About 6 o'clock the guests began to arrive and from then until 9:30 had a merry time. All kinds of games were indulged in and a dainty lunch was served. The following were present: Ruth and Lois Bucklehoff, Helen Bulger, Irene Jenkins, Beth Hunter, Catherine Nickson, Virginia Dunn, Agnes Amann, Irene Herron, Fanny Scarson, Beatrice Conway, Harold Robertson, Wilbert Allshack, Alexander Herron, Daniel and William Stevenson, Edward Laferty.

Oratorical Contest.

An oratorical contest to be held in Kelly's hall on Jan. 23, is being arranged by the W. C. T. U. Selections of music will be given by the High School glee club and selections by Miss Townsend, Miss Evans and Mr. Bevin. Rev J. V. Wright will make the presentation speech. Judges will be secured from out of town to decide the contest. Rev. M. M. Allbeck, who is training the class, will preside. An admission of only 10 cents will be charged.

Notice.

I wish to announce that I have withdrawn my candidacy for councilman in the First ward and take this opportunity of thanking those who pledged me their support.

Respectfully
ORVIN BAKER.

"The Romance of Coon Hollow" which plays at the opera house tonight was greeted by packed houses at both Charleroi and Monongahela, standing room being at a premium. Be sure to see this great production. A large number of seats are already sold.

Wonderful Erosion.

A curious effect of the wear and tear to which the earth's crust is ever being subjected is exhibited in the singularly capped pinnacles existing on South river, in the Wasatch mountains, in Utah. There are hundreds of these slender pillars, ranging in height from 40 to 400 feet, most of them crowned by large caps of stones. They are not works of human art, as might be imagined, but are the memorial monuments of the hill from which they have been cut by the action of air and water. Those pinnacles alone remain of many square miles of solid rocks, which have been washed away to a depth of some 400 feet. The greater hardness of the surface has caused it to resist corrosion more than the underlying rock, thus leaving huge caps of stone perched high in air on the points of their columns. One double column, capped by a single stone, forms a natural bridge both unique and picturesque.

The First Friction Matches.

The first really practicable friction matches were made by an English apothecary named Walker in 1827. He coated splints of cardboard with sulphur and tipped them with a mixture of sulphate of antimony, chlorate of potash and gum. Each box, holding eighty-four matches and sold for a shilling, contained also a folded piece of glass paper, which was to be pressed together while the match was drawn through it. Three years later another ingenious person named Jones in London patented the idea of making a small roll of paper, soaked with chlorate of potash and sugar at one end, with a thin glass globule filled with strong sulphuric acid attached at the same point. When the sulphuric acid was liberated by pinching the globule it acted upon the chlorate of potash and sugar so as to produce fire.

The Cicada Fable.

Several species of insects have apparatus for producing sounds similar to that of the grasshopper or modifications of it. Of a different type is that with which the cicadas are endowed. Only the males of this family are singers, for which the Greek poets called them happy because their females were dumb. With the ancients a cicada sitting on a harp was the symbol of music. A pretty fable tells of the contest between two cithara players, in which the curious event happened that when one of the contestants broke a string a singing cicada sprang on his harp and helped him out so that he gained the prize.

The World of Trade.

"Yesterday I bought," writes a correspondent, "some black jet buttons, and when I got home I found on the card, 'Best Australian Make.' I took a pencil to write in my account book. I found it had 'U S A' upon it. I sharpened the point, and on the sharpener was 'New York.' I got out a match to light the lamp, and on the box was 'Made in Sweden.' I lit the lamp and found on it, 'Made in Bavaria,' and so on and so on."—London Telegraph.

The Ideal Saddle Horse.

The ideal saddle horse is from fifteen to sixteen hands high, short backed and well coupled. It has thin, high withers, a long, well arched neck and a long, keen ear well set on the head. The tail should be set high on the rump, and the rump itself should be somewhat sloping. The horse should have besides flat, sinewy bones in its legs and a medium sized foot.—Country Life In America.

Fashionable Tailor—Go front at once. Two young clerks there after suits. New Man (whispering)—I'm waiting on a millionaire. "Leave him and attend to the clerks. These millionaires don't buy new clothes once in five years. A clerk is good for a fresh suit every three months."—New York Weekly.

Merely a Feeler.

The Count—Did her father acquire his money honestly? Miss Bright (sarcastically)—Yes! If he did not I suppose you would not marry her? The Count—Not at all. If he acquired it dishonestly I would probably be too clever to give any of it away.—New York Times.

His Argument.

Mrs. Jones—You ought to be ashamed of yourself not to go to work. The Tramp—Madam, if nature has fitted me to get along without work why should I struggle against my manifest destiny?

Drawing the Anchor.

"I see Nevins at the club quite often since his marriage." "I thought he was firmly moored to a home life." "He was, but at the first squall he began to drag his anchor."

A CONVICT'S ROMANCE

ODD WAY IN WHICH A LIFE PRISONER WON HIS FREEDOM.

The Story of the Construction of the Old Statehouse at Albany—The Price of a Genius Who Saw and Grasped His Opportunity.

Vouched for by the late Henry Smith, who said he learned the fact through being speaker of the assembly, there is an interesting bit of history connected with the old statehouse at Albany, where it has stood for years, the finest example of pure Doric architecture in this country, on the easterly side of Eagle street, between Pine and Steuben streets, its walls and partitions all of solid stone, very much as if its halls, rooms and stairs had been carved out within a huge block of marble.

It was completed in 1842, costing the state about $350,000. It is built entirely of Sing Sing marble, quarried and cut within the prison walls.

The old capitol being inadequate to accommodate the increasing business of the state, this additional building was planned and built and is still used for the offices of the state comptroller, the state engineer and surveyor and the state banking department.

In a spirit of economy it was decided to have as much as possible of the work done by the prisoners from the material found within the prison walls at Sing Sing, fairly good material, too, but not the best, as it is a soft marble, as evidenced by the wear which now shows so plainly in the steps and by the crumbling of some of the stones from exposure to the weather. All the material was cut to completion within the walls of the prison under such plans that when shipped to Albany there would be no further work necessary except practically to lay one stone upon another, and so on until the whole was assembled in the completed building.

To accomplish this detailed plan a system of marking the stones was necessary. The plans were carefully made and a system of marking elaborately laid out by the architect in charge, who found in the prison at Sing Sing a life prisoner whose record showed him to be an engineer of the highest ability and who seemed as competent as any man in the country to carry out the work to be done in the prison, and naturally he was not unwilling to follow his chosen profession in preference to doing the manual labor of cutting or quarrying stone. So, following the spirit of economy referred to above, the plans in detail and the system of marking were turned over to him and the whole work at that end given over to his full superintendence and absolute control.

In due time the stones in their various shapes and sizes and in quantity for the whole building were delivered in Albany and the work of construction commenced in accordance with the plans and system of marking originally furnished. With the very first stone there was trouble. It not only did not fit the place, but none of the stones marked to adjoin it fitted it, and, further, it did not seem ever intended for the place the number indicated. Investigation brought out that the stones were not of the sizes or shapes specified and shown on the plans, and, as to the system of marking, it was quite evident that the stones brought together by it had no relation whatever to each other.

The bewildered architect hardly knew whether he was a candidate for the asylum or possibly for Sing Sing. However, a careful verification of his plans and his marking system proved their correctness and the blame fell squarely upon the civil engineer, the life prisoner. He was questioned taken severely to task and roundly rated for his incompetence and threatened and abused. He met it all calmly. "It looks to me like a mighty good joke on you fellows. Anyway it is the best joke I have heard since I came to Sing Sing."

As to their continued threats he said: "What can you do to a life prisoner?"

Finally, in answer to the abuse and slurs as to his capabilities as an engineer, he said he had changed the plans both in dimension and shape where they had diverged from purity of style, and the system of marking he had changed altogether, but if they could find some one who understood his system the building would go up complete and perfect, excelling the original plan. "But," he added, with a grin, "you can probably get out new stone a good deal quicker than you can work out my system."

Then the state officials said, "We will take you to Albany and force you to put up the building."

He said, "No."

They pointed out the advantage of life in Albany for a time in preference to Sing Sing.

He said, "No."

They tried to bargain with him.

He said, "Secure my pardon and I will stand by you until the building is complete."

They offered to have him pardoned after he had proved what he said by finishing the building.

He said, "No."

Then they said they would compel him to do it anyway.

He said he could be compelled to work in prison, but not in Albany, and that even in prison they could compel him to do only manual labor unless he chose and that the price of his genius in grasping the opportunity that had come his way was a full pardon.

What else was there to do?

He was pardoned, and the old statehouse stands today in testimony of the fact that he kept his word and a glorious memory to an unknown genius.—New York Herald.

Read an old man's tribute.

Sidney Justus, fruit dealer, of Mentor, Ohio, says: "I was cured by Doan's Kidney Pills of a severe case of kidney trouble of eight or ten years' standing. I suffered the most severe backache and other pains in the region of the kidneys. These were especially severe when stooping to lift anything, and often I could hardly straighten my back. The aching was bad in the daytime, but just as bad at night, and I was always lame in the morning. I was bothered with rheumatic pains and dropsical swelling of the feet. The urinary passages were painful, and the secretions were discolored and so free that often I had to rise at night. I felt tired all day. Half a box served to relieve me, and three boxes effected a permanent cure."

Why Coughing Is Costly.

A patient German scientist with a statistical turn of mind calculates that the amount of energy expended by a person who coughs once every quarter of an hour for ten hours is equivalent to 250 units of heat, or the nourishment yielded by three eggs or two glasses of milk. Coughing is thus seen to be an expensive luxury. The reason for the waste in force entailed by it, or one reason at least, lies in the fact that, while in normal respiration the air is expelled from the chest at the rate of four feet a second, in violent coughing it may attain a velocity of 300 feet.

Strange Mountain Sickness.

If mountain sickness should come upon you your bitterest enemy will lead your horse for you. The symptoms are those of habitual drunkenness. All the limbs shiver, and in the bloodless face the eyes have that extraordinary look of insanity which is, I think, caused by an inability to focus them. The speech comes with difficulty, and in one case that I saw the mental coherence was as obviously at fault as the physical. — Lunder's "Lhassa."

A Test of Love.

Among the Arabs of upper Egypt the youth who proposes for a girl must submit to a whipping at the hands of all her male relatives. "And," says a dry narrator, "if he wishes to be considered worth having he must receive the chastisement, which is sometimes exceedingly severe, with an expression of enjoyment." Not infrequently it is the maiden herself who imposes the test.

Spoiled His Appetite.

Baron Graham once asked an epicure how many oysters he should eat in order to create a good appetite for dinner and was told to eat away until he became hungry. The baron, who never saw a joke, ate ten dozen and then plaintively remarked, "'Pon my word, I don't think I am as hungry as when I began."

Candor.

"Good gracious!" exclaimed the mint sauce. "I should think you'd be ashamed to masquerade as 'spring lamb.'"

"Well," replied the roast, "it does make me feel rather sheepish."—Catholic Standard and Times.

An Idle Jest.

"Pa, what is an 'idle jest?'"

"One that the newspapers haven't yet got hold of and worked to death."—Cleveland Leader.

"SALLY of OURS"

By CLAUDE PAMARES

Copyright, 1905, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

At the railroad eating house at Pine Hill they called her "Our Sally" and "Sally of Ours." Pine Hill was a small station at the foot of the mountains, and the eating house was for the convenience of the freight train crews and the few mechanics kept in the shop there to make repairs. It was Mother Walker who kept the Eagle Eating House, but it was "Sally of Ours" who got most of the credit. She was a young woman of twenty-eight, rough and uncultured and by no means good looking, but considerate and kind hearted to a degree. In a way, all the boys came to know that she had seen trouble, and they were careful not to indulge in remarks to hurt her feelings. It was always "Our Sally" who bound up their hurts or was ready with a remedy at the first sign of mountain fever.

It was a little community, seldom added to or detracted from, and it was quite an event when one day a new freight brakeman appeared among them. He was a man of thirty, and it was at once apparent that he was out of his element. He had the bearing and speech of a gentleman.

Within an hour of the arrival of his train the new hand was nicknamed "Gentleman George," and no one at Pine Hill ever learned that he had any other name. He dropped into his place among the rest, was in time called a good fellow, and things went on as before.

Not exactly, however—not with "Sally of Ours." Every man of the crowd was in the habit of speaking to her kindly, but there was something beyond that in the attitude of the new man. In a dim way she realized that he was above them in birth and social standing. She had made friends with the ordinary trainmen as an equal, but she feared and respected the new man. She heard it whispered that disappointment in love or some family matter had made a wanderer of him, and that added to the romance.

Within a month "Sally of Ours" was in love with "Gentleman George," but not for worlds would she have given her secret away. For a woman who had no social training she was a good dissembler, and, although some of the boys winked and nodded at times, none of them knew the depth of her feeling. Only once during the eight months the new man was on the road was her secret in danger. That was when a switch was thrown and a dozen freight cars were piled in a heap. She actually led the rescuing party, and it was her hands that helped to dig out "Gentleman George" from the wreck, and when it was found that he was badly bruised the other men saw tears in her eyes.

Two months after the accident the victim of the wreck took a partner and set off among the mountains on a prospecting trip.

The boys saw the two off with a farewell, and "Gentleman George" spent five minutes looking for "Our Sally" to shake hands with her. He did not find her until he had penetrated to the kitchen. Then she pretended that the tears in her eyes and her flushed face were caused by smoke. She was so nervous over the handshaking that the young man looked at her in surprise. The idea that she might care for him was one of the things of which he had never dreamed. Had she confessed it he would have smiled first and then been hard put to it to turn the matter off without hurting her feelings.

"And what's the meaning of this, I'd like to know?" asked Mother Walker as she entered the kitchen a few minutes after the prospectors had disappeared up the trail and found her helper with her head on the table.

"I've got—got the toothache," was the wailing reply.

"Um!" said the other. "I didn't know but that you'd been silly enough to think of love. Well, drop a little peppermint into your tooth, and then we'll go to work and clear up these dishes."

When two months had gone by the return of the prospectors was looked for daily. Winter threatened to set in early. The days went by and the snows came and the men did not return.

One evening when the first blizzard of the season was howling around Pine Hill Jack Ruthven came crawling in. He was the partner, and he was so knocked about and exhausted that it was twenty-four hours before they got a statement from him. The prospectors had had poor luck and had delayed until the last moment in hope of bettering it. Then came an unlooked for calamity. "Gentleman George" had been taken ill, and within thirty-six hours he developed a case of smallpox.

"And you left him there to die alone!" demanded Sally. "Of course."

"We had no food, no medicines. And what could I do?" he asked.

"Shame on you forever! In twenty-four hours the blizzard will have passed. What then? I ask you, Jack Ruthven, and I ask every other man present here—what then?"

No one answered her. The partner had said the distance was at least thirty miles to the rude shanty they had made headquarters, and there would be a foot and a half of snow on the ground and zero weather after the passing blizzard. No man felt that he had one chance in twenty of reaching the sick man.

"And what then?" asked the woman again. There was the same silence and shaking of heads as before.

Next morning, an hour after daylight, Mother Walker found the young woman making up a bundle and putting on her heaviest garments.

"What is it?" she asked.

"I am going after George," was the quiet reply.

"What! Thirty miles through weather like this!"

"There is no man here, and so I am forced to go myself. It will be no use to argue. If he is alive I will bring him back. Say nothing to the boys until I am gone. Then have them fit up a warm room in one of the sheds. You can get one of the Indian boys to bring us food, and the operator will telegraph to Cedar Crest for the doctor."

"Sally of Ours" was gone before the railroad hands knew anything about it. The blizzard passed away as the day grew older, but every man knew that with that depth of snow on the ground and the thermometer standing way below zero the woman had set herself a tremendous task. Even if she succeeded in reaching the spot she would find the sick man dead.

Three days passed. They were days in which the strong and sturdy men off duty tried to make themselves believe that no shame had come to them by refusing to form a rescuing party, but they ate their meals and went about their work without consolation.

An hour after nightfall of the third day "Sally of Ours" appeared. She had a burden on her broad back. When her hello was heard she was directed to the room prepared. Thence on for twenty days neither the woman nor her patient was seen. Each morning she would call out the condition of the sick man and each night would slip out to the coal pile and secure fuel for the next day.

At the end of three weeks the room was thrown open one morning, the place fumigated, and then "Sally of Ours" walked forth with the skeleton of a man clinging to her arm. A month later "Gentleman George" was something like his old self again. He had been more than usually quiet during the month, and the young woman had lost her smile and her repartee. Every one felt that something must happen, and it was an engineer who said:

"Yes, something must happen, and I can tell you what it'll be. They will get married, of course."

"Sally," said "Gentleman George" the next day, "I am going away—going back east. You saved my life."

"Stop there, George," she replied as she lifted a hand. "I belong with the crowd. You don't. You feel grateful, and perhaps you are going to ask me to be your wife. Don't do it. We should both be miserable. If, as a gentleman, you can remember Sally of the eating house, that's all I ask. You couldn't pull me up, and I'm the last one who'd want to drag you down. We'll shake hands, and—and"—

And when he went away next morning, to be seen no more at Pine Hill, she had her head on the kitchen table again and was weeping harder than before.

Blood Stains.

To the present day the superstition is rife that blood stains cannot be washed out. During the French revolution eighty priests were massacred in the Carmelite chapel at Paris, and the stains, so called, of their blood are pointed out today.

Sir Walter Scott, in his "Tales of a Grandfather," declares that the blood stains of David Rizzio, the Italian private secretary of Mary, queen of Scots, who was stabbed at Holyrood palace by certain Protestant leaders of her court, aided by her husband, Darnley, are still to be seen.

In Lancashire the natives show a stone called the "bloody stone," which was so marked to show heaven's displeasure at some of Cromwell's soldiers' atrocities at Gallows Croft. In "Macbeth," act 5, scene 1, Shakespeare alludes to the idea, "Yet here's a spot."

The truth is, blood cannot be easily expunged. In the first place, if that of a murdered person, it is not attempted. In the next place, blood contains oxide of iron, which sinks deep into the fiber of wood and proves indelible to ordinary washing. Thus it is true that stones of a porous nature and wood not of the hardest kind are susceptible to the stain of blood produced by the oxide of iron which the blood contains. But the blood of a pig is as good as that of a murdered man.—Pearson's Weekly.

Oriental Flowers of Speech.

In the far east language has always been more florid and ambiguous than in the west. The king of Ava, in Burma, called himself the "regulator of the seasons, the absolute master of the ebb and flow of the sea, brother of the sun and lord of the four and twenty umbrellas." The king of Arracan, lower Burma, was "possessor of the white elephant and the two earrings," as well as "lord of the twelve kings who placed their heads under his feet." In the Mozambique-Zambezi region of Africa the king of Monomtopa was not only "lord of the sun and moon," but "great magician and great thief."

Another eastern potentate was the "sovereign of the universe, whose body is as luminous as the sun, created to be as accomplished as the moon in her plenitude; king as spiritual as the bull is round." Of the ruler of Kandahar it was said that his fame "exceeds the moon and stars and the unexpanded jasmine buds" and that his "feet are as fragrant to the noses of other sovereigns as flowers to bees."

On the Road to Wealth.

"Want my daughter, eh? What are your prospects?"

"Well, I own a gold mine."

"Working it?"

"No—working the public with it."

"Take her and be happy."—Life.

The Sword of the Crusader

(Original.)

Centuries ago there lived a crusader, Sir Geoffrey Burgess, who was noted both for his bravery and his piety. His hatred of the infidel Turk was something terrible. From first to last he carried the same sword, one of those immense weapons that have long ago passed out of date. Every time Geoffrey Burgess killed a Turk he filed a notch on the blade of this sword just beneath the hilt. At the conclusion of his campaigns there were notches sufficient to reach on both edges from the hilt to the point.

Sir Geoffrey returned from the seventh crusade and was making preparations for the eighth when he was taken with a fever and died. He was buried with great honors in the town in which he had lived, and a fine marble monument was placed by those who revered him over his grave, surmounted by a statue of him.

Two hundred years after Sir Geoffrey's death Mohammed II., the great sultan of the Ottomans, invested Constantinople, and after a short siege the cross which since the time of Constantine had surmounted the dome of St. Sophia was replaced by the crescent. On the very day of this change a storm swept over Sir Geoffrey's grave and a bolt of lightning rent his statue in three pieces. Singularly enough they remained on the pedestal. It was not doubted that the lightning was an expression of the old knight's anger at the fall of the Christian city, and the fact that his statue remained erect was taken as evidence of his inflexible will.

Another century passed. The crusades if unsuccessful in freeing the holy sepulcher brought about a commercial intercourse between the west and the east. There were Christian merchants in Asia and Asiatic merchants in Europe, but never was a Turk seen in the town where Sir Geoffrey Burgess was buried. Some said that the Moslems knew of his reputation and dared not profane it; others that the shade of the holy man guarded the town and kept them away.

The knight's sword was handed down from father to son and at the close of the fifteenth century, when Columbus was trying to find a passage around the globe to India to facilitate the trading in spices, hung in the hall of John Burgess, a plain citizen, the title having been lost sight of. One day John Burgess was sitting in his house when the door opened and a man came hurriedly in from the street. He was a very soldierly looking man, wearing an armor not at all like that in fashion. The invention of gunpowder was then beginning to put armor aside, and what was still used was plate, while the stranger wore chain armor.

"Sir," said the man in a dialect so different from that used that Burgess could scarcely understand him, "have you a weapon handy?" Burgess cast a glance at the sword of the crusader and asked:

"For what purpose?"

But the stranger without reply went to the wall where hung the sword and, taking it down, drew the blade from the scabbard, ran his thumb over the notches, thrust the steel back and with both blade and scabbard started for the door, handling the heavy weapon like a plaything.

Now, Burgess had often lifted this heirloom and had found considerable difficulty in doing so. When he had hung it up on the wall he had been obliged to call in a neighbor to assist him. When he saw the stranger take it down with one hand and carry it like a rapier he was astonished. Indeed he was so startled by the sudden appearance with its strange armor and features that for a time he sat not knowing what to do. Presently curiosity moved him, and he ran out after the man who had borrowed his weapon. He was nowhere to be seen. Burgess ran down the street and, turning a corner, came upon the body of a man of swarthy countenance lying on his back, and standing up from the body, like a shaft to mark it, was the sword of Sir Geoffrey Burgess.

A crowd soon gathered, including the watch. Burgess, who had first come on the ground, told his story of the stranger taking his sword, but he was not believed. The watch took him into custody, and he was thrown into prison to await trial for murder.

The case was so plain against him that his counsel undertook it half heartedly, and when a stranger came into town who said he was an advocate and offered to defend the accused Burgess gave it into his hands. The advocate called for the body of the murdered man to be brought into court, and when this was done, placing his hand in the hair, which was black and matted, he drew out a paper that had been concealed there. Opening it, he showed Arabic characters. "The man is a disguised Moslem," said the advocate, "and such has never been seen in your town before. An angel had taken the sword of the crusader and smitten the intruder."

With this he went away and was never seen in the town again.

Whether it was that those were superstitious times or whether some one seized the sword to dispatch and rob an enemy none can at this day tell. The court were all familiar with the lightning stricken statue and at once formed the idea that the crusader's shade could not bear the profanation of an infidel and, going for the sword, had killed the intruder. The advocate they believed to have been sent from heaven. Be this as it may, Burgess, who recovered his sword, always declared that after the murder of the Turk he discovered another notch on the blade.

Nutrition

If you do not gain strength and energy from your food you should drink Monessen Brewery Ale regularly—at mealtime.

Monessen Brewery Ale is a pure "undoctored" and unsweetened malt product. All of its virtues come straight from the malted field-barley and selected Bohemian hops.

It does not digest food, but it healthfully tones the stomach, aiding digestion, and contains easily digested food properties of its own.

Good physicians will commend its moderate use. We guarantee Monessen Brewery Ale to be of absolute purity.
